The proverb ‘A stitch in time saves nine’ embodies a truth which few will feel disposed to dispute. Taken literally, it means that if we take the trouble to mend a tear in our garments in time, a single stitch may serve our purpose. But if we neglect to mend it when the tear is small, it will gradually become bigger and will require a good deal of stitching, involving much time, trouble and expense.

What is true of our garments is also true of many affairs of our life. Hence, the proverb seeks to teach a good practical lesson. Any weakness, defect or disability in us should not be allowed to grow and take firm root in us. It should be remedied at the first opportunity. As in the case of an individual, so also in the case of a society. No evil should grow and gradually eat into its vitals. The maxim is thus a call for doing the right thing at the right moment.
