Making a good speech requires a one hundred percent workout from your body, from your heart as well as your brain. The ability to speak effectively is an acquirement rather than a gift.

The beginning and the end of a speech are the most important and vital organs to the body of the whole speech, without these two, the speech will be like a torso without head and legs. To be a successful speaker, you must find your own voice, using language that is right for you. You must have a meaningful message. You should be able to speak with conviction and confidence. With speech skills, you will rise in your chosen field to a powerful position of leadership and make an important contribution to the society. You will open a vast range of spectacular opportunities for the future.

Answer the following questions:

- i) What is a 'good speech'?
- ii) Write words from the passage which mean the following:
