Q. 1 a) Read the following extract and answer the questions that follow: (07)

Palliative care, also called 'comfort Care, is aimed at providing relief to a terminally ill -person through symptom and pain management. Its goal is to maintain the highest quality of life possible. But in our present-day health care situation, the emphasis is still more on curing diseases, and if that doesn't happen, patients are often left to survive by themselves with whatever support their families and friends are able to give them. In the majority of cases, patients who are terminally ill and in pain suffer terribly and have a poor quality of life.

Let us consider the case of Radha, a 65 year old woman who had cancer of the breast. She underwent surgery followed by radiotherapy and chemotherapy. A year later, Radha developed ulceration of the chest and experienced acute pain. Added to this, there was the emotional pain of disfigurement which was just as traumatic. All Radha wanted was relief from the pain and care of her family. Unfortunately, due to extreme weakness and inability to eat, she died much against her wishes- away from her family and home.
